Blog: Our View on Kim Davis It is unfortunate that one public official, in this case Kim Davis, has felt the need to take her own religious beliefs into the public arena. This in no way is about what she believes, it is about what she thinks she can get away with. Those who have been following this situation are aware that the United States Constitution is completely irrelevant. The idea that a “Christian” should be the one to impose her religious beliefs on the public is a thought process that has been stuck in the Dark Ages for centuries. And we are no longer going to accept that! I like most people think that everyone should be able to practice the religion of their choice, however, there are a few lines that should not be crossed. And those lines should not be blurred when it comes to what the United States Constitution says about religion. It is sad to see someone use their religious faith as a way to push their own view of how things should be. It is sad to see someone try to impose their religious views on others who don't believe as they do, especially when the very freedoms that they are trying to impose on others are based on their religion. No one should be allowed to deny marriage to others. All should be able to be married. We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness. A nation of laws not of men, we will not tolerate bigotry and intolerance of any kind, it is not how we operate as Americans. If anyone should take a lesson from this, it is those that should be governing us. The people of Kentucky are very tolerant and accepting. We believe that everyone should be able to choose what they believe in, to make the choices that are best for them. Some of those that voted to keep Kim Davis in her position are not the kind of people that I would expect to support the marriage of gay couples. Some of those that oppose Kim Davis feel that homosexuality is an abomination. I have met many gay people who are hardworking and kind-hearted. There are people who live as “a lie” just so that their family doesn't have to watch their loved one sin. There are those that have come out of the closet in the name of what 82157476af
